Commentary

Our portfolio trailed the MSCI EM Index in December but performed modestly better than the benchmark for the quarter. Global markets were pressured in Q4 amid rising trade tensions, a partial US government shutdown and slumping oil prices. The forces combined to amplify YTD losses as the index finished 2018 in the red. Although emerging markets fared better than their developed counterparts in Q4, only a handful of countries were positive performers in the index.

Among our top relative contributors for the quarter were two off-benchmark holdings, Linx and Kajaria. Linx, Brazil's leading retail management software company, benefited from its launch of Linx Pay, a wholly owned subsidiary that is expected to meaningfully expand revenues through its newly established payments acquirer business and other fintech initiatives. We trimmed our exposure as shares approached our target price.

Shares of Kajaria, India's largest tile manufacturer, advanced in part due to increased government funding for affordable housing, which is expected to drive demand for construction materials. We also believe that a broader secular trend of home improvement projects among India's growing middle class will drive positive results for the company. We increased our position in Kajaria in accordance with our conviction.

Among our bottom relative contributors in Q4 were Samsung Biologics and China Petroleum & Chemical Corp. Samsung Biologics shares remained pressured amid allegations of accounting fraud, which the company has adamantly denied. After suspending company trading for almost a month, Korea's financial regulator opted not to delist Samsung Biologics and instead allowed the company's shares to resume trading in December, sparking a rally in the company's share price. Throughout the controversy, we have maintained our conviction in the company's best-in-class manufacturing capabilities and strong pipeline of marketable biosimilars.

Shares of China Petroleum & Chemical Corp, also known as Sinopec, slumped in late December after the company announced it experienced "some losses" due to weak oil prices. Although company management did not disclose details, industry experts estimate the losses will amount to roughly $1.5 billion, likely stemming from a poorly executed oil options strategy. We believe the headwinds are short-term, and we have maintained our position in Sinopec.

Volatility is to be expected in emerging markets—it's a natural part of what we believe is a superior growth opportunity over longer periods. As such, we will maintain our disciplined process and closely monitor positions—including on-the-ground visits—to adjust valuations and position size as we believe appropriate.

Carefully consider the Fund's investment objective, risks and charges and expenses. This and other important information is contained in the Fund's prospectus and summary prospectus, which can be obtained by calling 800.344.1770. Read carefully before investing.

International investments involve special risks, including currency fluctuation, lower liquidity, different accounting methods and economic and political systems, and higher transaction costs. These risks typically are greater in emerging markets. Such risks include new and rapidly changing political and economic structures, which may cause instability; underdeveloped securities markets; and higher likelihood of high levels of inflation, deflation or currency devaluations. Securities of small- and medium-sized companies tend to have a shorter history of operations, be more volatile and less liquid and may have underperformed securities of large companies during some periods.

MSCI Emerging Markets Index measures the performance of emerging markets. The index(es) are unmanaged; include net reinvested dividends; do not reflect fees or expenses; and are not available for direct investment.
